Hello, _____,

You may have heard about an important conversation that's been happening across our profession this year. You may have even attended the kick-off of this conversation, the Summit on the Future of Naturopathic Medicine at the AANP Convention in July. Over 100 individuals in our field came together as part of this facilitated conversation to be heard, to identify key themes that need to be addressed as we move forward as a unified profession, and to lay the groundwork for facilitating a culture of collaboration.

The conversation is being hosted by the Naturopathic Medicine Collaborative (NMC) with the goal of hearing input from all individuals and organizations that care about the profession's future and ultimately unifying around an action agenda that will best serve the health of patients, the public, and the planet.

I'd like to personally invite you to join in on the next step of this process. On the morning of Saturday, November 10, the next session of this ongoing conversation is happening through a state-of-the-art virtual discussion. This will be the first of three such virtual discussions planned through late spring 2019. The plan for this session is to focus the conversation on two crucial topics identified in July.

I would be honored if you'd bring your valued input to this session.

Topics: : "Our core identities as naturopathic doctors," and "Our shared goal of building a positive professional culture"
